Meriden appoints liquidator

From Clifford Webb Birmingham

The remaining 180 members of the Meriden motor cycle coopertive yesterday voted to put the company, which has debts of almost £2m into liquidation.

A year ago the Government wiped out debts of £11m owing on state aid received since the cooperative was formed eight years ago under the sponsorship of Mr Wedgewood Benn, who was then Secretary of State for Industry.

Several similar cooperatives which were aided by Mr Benn have already closed.

Meriden has not produced a motorcycle since February, when the workers were laid off.

At the end of a five-hour meeting yesterday Mr John Rosamond, the workers' elected chairman, appounced that the accountants Peat Marwick & Mitchell had been nominated as liquidator for a meeting of shareholders and creditors to be held on August 26.

The cooperative was launched in March, 1975 with the heip of a £4.2 loan and a £750.000 grant.

Another factor in Meriden's avour was the general reluctance to admit that the once dominant British motor cycle industry - it held 70 per cent of world markets in the 1950s could not be rescued. Triumph was one of the best known names in the industry and commanded immense loyalty among enthusiasts.

Only two years earlier the Conservative Government, faced with the imminent collapse of BSA/Triumph, had provided £5m to smooth the way for Mr Dennis Poore to lead a single British motor cycle group combining AMC (AJS, Norton and Matchless) and Villiers (two-stroke engines) with BSA and Triumph to form Norton Villiers Triumph.

It was Mr Poore's decision to close Triumph Meriden and concentrate production on BSA's Birmingham works which triggered the Meriden sit-

Several hundred protester arrived at Greenham Common. in Berkshire, yesterday, as part of a series of marches, fasts and vigils being held worldwide to commemorate the 38th anniversary today of the dropping of the Hiroshima atomic bomh in Japan.

They included people from Star 14 towns and cities on Star (Stop the Arms Race) marches who are joining a 100-strong Walk for Life, outside Greenham Common. That march set off from the Faslane nuclear submarine base in Scotland in May.

A fast is also due to be started by nine people who say that they prepared to die. They will continue "until significant steps are taken to break the momentum of the nuclear arms race".

As Hiroshima yesterday prepared to renew its appeal for nuclear disarmament, a leading apanese physician has said that the bomb may have prevented widespread starvation and have "saved" Japan. Dr Taro Takemi, an immedi

Ousted Prime Minister seizes power in Upper Volta coup

least five people died in an apparently successful coup against the Upper Voltan leader. Major Jean-Baptiste Ouedraogo, sources at the Yalgadogo Ouedraogo Hospital said vesterday.

The dead were two soldiers and three civilians. Six French nationals, including a four-yearold child, were among the 15 people known to have been wounded in the fighting, which followed the coup by the former Prime Minister, Captain Thomas Sankara.

The French casualties were returning from a restaurant to their home near Major Ouedsuogo's residence when they were hit by bursts from automatic weapons.
Captain Sankara yesterday

It was the biggest success for the Tigers and has been the most dearly paid for since they began operations in 1975 with the murder of the Mayor of Thirty-one policemen have died at the hands of the Tigers, so have 20 servicemen, (including the 13 who died last weekend) and 28 civilians. Last month alone there were 21 incidents of terrorist violence. Since the evacuation of terrorist violence.

On patrol with a squad of soldiers, it is easy enough to sense the hostility of the local inhabitants to what they must see as an occupying force. Brandishing loaded sub-machine guis, the troops have been targets for stone-throwing in crowded streets, While we were on the road the men found a petrol bomb, left in the way of the Jeep. Lieutenant V Wellkkala, the officer in command, said: "They leave them about to

The solders are of course accused of brutality and violence. Colonel Silva shakes his head wearily at the accusation. The colonel has a reply to those who access his soldiers of sexual offences against the local population.

"It is not in the Sinhalese nature", he says. "There have only been six offences egainst women on the whole island. BBCWSO/Thomson Albert Hall/Radio 3 Thursday's Prom could have lonked like miscasting the BBC's Welsh Orchestra, in a largely Scandinavian programme. Any doubts, though, were quickly dispelled by a beautiful, pure and unforced performance of Grieg's first Peer Gynt suite, where Bryden Thomson's careful direction kept this over-exposed music fresh and intact while treating it with unaccustomed seriousness. The Wagner of Parsifal was not far away, thanks in large part to the purposeful perfection of the high woodwind.

A new piece by Aulis Sallinen, his prelude, Shadows, threw sbafts of bleak light into other departments of the or-chestra: the solid, glowering combination of brass and low woodwind, the firm tread of the strings en masse, the brightness of the trumpets. Apparently linked to his opera in progress, The King Leaves for France, which is destined for Covent Garden, Shadows confirms the tendency in Sallinen's music for Sibelius to be acknowledged ever more openly as father figure. The work is a 10-minute adagio of great gloom, figured in the middle by military music, Berg stepping on to the Sibelian tundra.

After this, there was real Sibelius in a performance of the Fifth Symphony that Mr Thomson weighed out with the same judiciousness he had found in the Grieg. Things were allowed to unfold rather than encouraged to happen, and though that sometimes had the effect of making wind solos appear colourless, it was the right It is tempting sometimes to use television as a retreat and, as was possible last night, to enter

They managed such things much better in Bax's Violin Concerto, whose three movements are all in turn condensations of a three-movement form. The result of this conceit is a long work, one lasting for nearly 40 minutes, but in the finale at least the technique justifies itself, with a rustic dance slipping into waltz sophistication and then extricating itself.

What also justified this was the artistry of Manoug Parikian as soloist.

Radio Skin deep

Among my fellow passengers on me that that strangeness may a long flight home recently were bere have been somewhat two young women, one ac-companied by a man, all fair Scandinavians, I believe, and each girl clutching a baby which only by the most extraordinary chance could have been their own, since one was very black and negroid, the other paler skinned but black-eyed, dark hair and with the typical features of the present-day Latin-American Indian. The babies had to be adopted, taking their first enormous step in the process so graphically described by Andy Price in Mntherland (Radio 4, July 30; producer, Sharon Banoff).

Without a doubt these two children would be coming into an environment indescribably more affluent than the one they old enough to retain any clear memories of its origins. So surely this adoption was a proper act of mercy, a right thing to be doing. The same could be said, with emphasis, for many of those who contributed to the programme - hlack, Vietnamese, Hongkong Chinese but, not one of those who skin colour and/or physical type differed much from the broad range of the Northern European norm, could really be said to have been fully absorbed into an adopted country and culture. At best the change had been a success on balance.

One could almost read the future for those two infants in the plane in the covert glances of their fellow passengers whose expressions spoke of admiration and approval, via profound misgiving to barely suppressed hostility. Hearing Motherland confirmed the likelihood of that prediction; while in their new British families and their circle, these children had found love, support and a high degree of security, outside it was often a different matter. It may or may not be so that we are all brothers and sisters under the skin; in practice the skin is about as far as we go. We react first, and all too often last, to difference, to strangeness and only hy an effort of will or in the end through long familiarity do we seem able to mitigate what that first reaction does.

There is an element of strangeness in the work of Samuel Beckett which always challenges the listener's accept-ance, but hearing Worstward He (Radio 3, Aug 4; director, Peter Dear Ronald Mason) is occurred to outweighed by a deadening familiarity.

In this latest of what is now a long run of monologues for radio, we were of course for the first time in years without the mesmeric voice of the late Patrick Magee. Norman Rodway was the speaker and a fine performer he is, but his voice does not, probably cannot, suggest that dogged, slightly self-mocking anguish which his predecessor managed by some means to induce in the minds of the listeners, thus persuading them to share in Beckett's vision.

Less than mesmerised, it struck me that his "On, somehow on... nohow on..." and his "Only one good, gone, gone for good..." (which I take as meaning that there is both no alternative to, and no point in, proceeding through life) closely resemble to the point of repetition what be has said to me on a string of previous occasions. So now I wonder if it is because of the magic of the man's name that radio allows him to repeat himself to a degree it would not tolerate from other writers. On the other hand, I will take almost any amount of the same from Johnny Morris, perhaps because his Around the World in 25 Years (Radio 4, Mondays and Tuesdays) is so blessedly free of any intention to tell me anything about Life, but is ceaselessly interested in the lives of the people he encounters. His description last week of bow on their travels through France he and "Tubby Foster" turned up at a château fallen on hard times and reduced to taking guests in was a masterpiece of observation and in its way as clear an example as need be of the state of "On, somebow on... nobow on..." Long may Morris circumorbit, but will he...?for "Tuhby Foster" (in the ample frame of his producer, Brian Patten) is dead and I am sure, that this enchanting series, like much else that came out of BBC Bristol, owed much to the partnership of performer with that one gifted man.

Oh how I wish that Morris and Patten had had a band in Capital's Queen Mum, A Loving Profile Aug 1). Then we might have heard something. But this 83rd hirthday celebration, well-made and well-intentioned though it was, somebow missed its subject altogether and left us none the closer to her at the end.

Europe's wine prospects Part 3

Germans expect best vintage since 1976

Despite the vagaries of the are guardedly optimistic about this year's harvest. The third part of the series on European wine is written by JAMES HUTCHINSON in Bonn.

The quality of this year's German wines is expected to be the highest since the memornble 1976 vintage. But predictions that it will be the wine of the century are received with scepticism.

As one grower put it: "No sooner do we have a beatwave than people start making that kind of forecast. We can reach a true judgment only when wine is in the cellar.

One thing is certain - this year's yield will be much smaller than that of 1982 The wine trade is pleased about this, because last year a wet summer caused the market to be swamped by wine, much of it of inferior quality.

Since the wine regions of Germany are much closer together than those of France they are not subject to wide elimatic differences, and therefore the optimistic forecasts hold good for all German wines Rhine-Pfalz: Produces n

Mosel-Sear-Ruwer: Much

better quality than 1982, but not expected to be quite up to the 1976 standard. "In 1976 we had sunshine right up to harvest time," a spokesman of the Growers Association said in Treir. "We cannot count on this year and if we get hailstorms our calculations could go

The quantity will be about 30 per cent down famous for its Riesling, and the area produces about three per cent of Germany's total wine output.

Baden: The vines look promising, both as to quality ind quantity, although after the heatwave they could do with a little mnisture. "It's too early to make a firm prognosis," a spokesman said. "We don't normally start the harvest until September 20, and a prolonged wet period could put paid to our hopes. I don't think we are going to achieve the 1976 standard."

Reagan's backyard blunder

New York Unless he is stopped by Congress - and only Congress and the force of public opinion can stop him - Ronald Reagan could plunge this country into the most unwanted, unconscionable, unnecessary and unwinnable war in its history, not excepting Vietnam.

Reagan sees the trouble in Central America as coming from outside the area, as revolution exported from the Soviet Union and Cuba. His response is to dispatch huge naval and air armadas to the waters off the Nicaraguan coasts and thousands of American troops to the ranchlands and jungles of neighbouring Honduras.

If the revolutionaries in Nicaragua and the guerrillas in El Salvador whom they support do not capitulate before this display of American might - as they almost certainly will not - Reagan will have left himself little choice between reversing his Central America policy and moving in with American guns, planes and men.

Since the premises of Reagan's policy are wrong, his actions stemming from that policy are wrong, Latin America's revolutions, including those of Mexico, Cuba, El Salvador and Nicaragua, are bomegrown, not exported from anywhere else. The undoubted communist influence on these revolutions - always strong and always inevitable - cannot be nullified by external military force, as even Reagan should bave lcarned from the Bay of Pigs and the events

These revolutions and revolutionaries can be a threat to our security (a minor one at that) only if we force them completely into the Soviet corner and isolate them there. The Russians, their agents and their disciples cannot do as much harm to the long-term interests of the United States as

by John B. Oakes

we are doing to ourselves by imitating them in trying to impose our style of democracy on people who may be totally unready or

Because of the hrutal purge of Central American experts as soon as he took office, Reagan had no one around to tell him that the Sandinista arms build-up in Nicaragua might just possibly not have been impelled by the desire to conquer all the rest of Central America for Castro and Marx. It might have stemmed from genuine fear, founded on history, of direct American military intervention. Fantastic as that may have seemed to Reagan at the time, it doesn't seem so fantastic today - certainly no more fantastic than what he is doing right now to Honduras.

He is remilitarizing this pathetically poor and helpless country just as it is emerging from years of military rule. He is undermining its fragile democracy and indirectly inciting open warfare between Honduras and its neighbours. He is using Honduras not only as a springboard for forces opposed to the Nicaraguan regime but also as a training ground - on the cheap - for Salvadoran government troops.

Perhaps no one in the Reagan entourage knew that the last Central American war - a hrief hut savage one just a few years ago - was between El Salvador and Honduras. Historically, the two countries have had an unfriendly relationship. The presence of Salvadoran troops on Honduran soil is a prescription for trouble - for which Reagan again will bave to bear the responsibility.

The record in Guatemala is no better. Guerrilla warfare has been smouldering there for at least 20 years. Even less than El Salvador, less than Nicaragua, did Guatemala need Castro or Marx or communist propaganda to pit rich against poor, oligarchy against peasantry, army against guerrillas. While gross national product has gone up, the living standard of 80 per cent of the population has gone down as large-scale agriculture has pushed the Indian peasants into ever less fertile and ever less productive areas in which to grow their own scanty food.

Guatemala's born-again president, who was catapulted into power after a postelection coup last year, may be somewhat less bloodthirsty than his infamous predecessors, but they at least did not have the temerity to claim, as he does, that they were in direct personal contact with the Almighty. Because President Efrain Rios Montt talks to God and not Marx, the Reagan administration can think of nothing better to do with American power and money than to resume the military support that was cut off several years ago because of Guatemala's abominable human rights record. American military supplies have no purpose in Guatemala but continued repression of the Guatemalan people, particularly its large Indian segment.

The growing military involvement of the United States in Nicaragua, Honduras and Guatemala – as well as in El Salvador – may stimulate Reagan's ego and self-image as standing up to communism, but it is painfully clear that it does nothing to enhance our national security or the welfare of the people of Central America.

Plotting to save the good old British vegetable

Patricia Clough reports growing unrest over EEC policy

If you have taken over an old kitchen garden or allotment, think twice before pulling up those odd. brown-leaved lettuces or those curious beans with pods pointing upwards. When tidying the garden shed, pause before throwing away any old, faded seed packets. You may be destroying the last examples of some ancient British vegetable. condemning it to oblivion for ever.

This fate is threatening many old vegetables, grown for centuries in Britain's gardens and fields, the seeds handed down through generations, passed on to neighbours or bought in local markets. Many were restricted to small areas where they grew well, sometimes to one village or even only one plot.

Now they face extinction, the victims of standardization measures throughout the EEC which, in Britain, can mean fines of up to £1,000 for anyone who sells their

It may already be too late for the Durham miners' leek, which helped to keep its growers going through the grim days of the depression. Mr dant at the Northern Horticultural Society's headquarters at Harlow Car, near Harrogate, is looking for survivors but fears it has died out.

There is the Martock bean, cultivated since Cistercian monks started vegetable breeding in Britain in the 12th century, which survives in the Somerset village of Martock. Even older is the Ragged Jack, a course, pinkish variety of kale believed to have been brought to Britain by the Romans. The old bean and pea varieties which dried well and provided Britons with a valuable source of protein for winter are vanishing, leaving the field to the kind that freeze well. Such is the Carlin pea, bred since Elizabethan times and common until the Second World War, and the soldier bean, so called because of a brown soldier-like figure on the white husk. Both are

"If varieties like this go we are losing a unique genetic resource", Mr Swindells says. "Once it has gone you can't breed it back again." It is not really the EEC's fault. Like several other countries, Britain had been sorting out its seed regulations in the 1960s, but after it joined the EEC these were tightened up still further to suit Community regulations. More than 1,000 names were dropped and others are being weeded out as time passes. There is now an official EEC list of permitted varieties, which is an amalgam of the ten official national lists.

The point of the lists was to create order among much confusion. Some varieties were called by different names in different parts of EEC countries. Conversely, the same names were being applied to several varieties that were in fact quite different. Government officials maintain that they simply threw out names, and that gardeners looking for a certain variety would find it under another name. But critics maintain that many actual varieties were dropped in the process.

One uncalculated side effect of the lists was to encourage the popular, commercially profitable, market-gardening varieties at the expense of the small, old-fashioned or local varieties planted by the amateur gardener. Any seedsman who wants to register a new variety has to pay about £600 for testing and another £80 a year for registration, which he can afford only if he is sure it will well - that is, at least 5.000 sell dackets. Anyone can register an old variety, but they must be prepared to produce it on a suitable scale, and they do not get royalties.

As a result, the old-fashioned. space-saving amateur gardeners' pea, which grows to around five of six feet, is giving way to shorter, bushier versions more easily harvested by the commercial market gardener. Brussels sprouts plants which keep the housewife supplied over several weeks are disappearing in favour of those which produce sprouts all at once for mechanical

Varieties on the lists must be "distinct" and "stable", which suits the modern, high-yield, F.I hybrid varieties which come up virtually identical, but not the primitive oldfashioned vegetables whose offspring are as different as the children in any family. The old-fashioned grower has smaller yields, but he could be reasonably sure that at least some would survive disease, a hard winter or drought. They might be less attractive, smaller and tougher than modern types but, their growers swear, they taste so much

However, in the vegetables' moment of peril, there are defenders to the rescue. First among these is Lawrence D. Hills, director of the Henry Doubleday Research Association at Bocking, near Braintree in Essex. He has founded a seed library from which members can borrow unlisted seeds, replacing them when the plants reproduce their own. Members can become "seed guardians", raising and caring for threatened varieties.

Mr Hills is collecting seeds from Spain and Portugal in preparation for those countries' entry into the EEC, foreseeing that their richness of varieties will dwindle in the same way as Britain's. He is looking for a Greek correspondent who will obtain seeds of vegetables cultivated for centuries by the monks at Mount Athos monastery.

Thanks partly to his efforts, a gene bank has been set up with funds from Oxfam at the National Vegetable Research Station at Wellesbourne, near Stratford-on-Avon. In the two and a half years since it was founded, it has collected 4,700 different kinds of seeds - the target is 20,000 - which are preserved at minus 25 degrees C.

Like Mr Hills, the research station encourages gardeners to send in seeds of little-known varieties or any old seed packets they may find. The bank can preserve a variety for centuries - if it gets the seeds in time. "If they do not come to us many are likely to die out", a spokesman said.

The gene bank is part of a worldwide network which is growing up amid growing concern at the loss of genetic diversity. The seeds pre-served may hold qualities such as disease resistance, hardiness or nutritional values which may be valuable for future generations.

Mr Derek Enright, Member of the European Parliament for Leeds, has extracted from Mr Poul Dalsager, the EEC Agriculture Commissioner, an assurance that the EEC will treat the problems of the small gardener sympathetically. Some of his constituents are worried about the future of the Leeds lettuce, a small local variety.

Many old vegetables can be seen. and sometimes even tasted, at five vegetable sanctuaries. One is at Mr Hills' establishment near Braintree, another at Harlow Car. Save trees — don't Honour! Let the truth be told throught the ancient pages of The Times. This is how it goes.

In 1974 during the building boom, my meagre semi-detached was suddenly very important in that they were pulling the street down to build high rise flats (the population of England is falling, ha ha ha), so a developer offers, me hundreds of developer offers me hundreds of thousands of pounds or he will exchange my semi-det. 2 up, kit, bt., gdn. for a Mansion in Hertfordshire, gon, for a Mansion in Rectionashire, so we did a straight swop, but the mansion, once in rambling acres, (see diagram A) was now all subdivided (see diagram B). It was now a piece of land a la postage stamp, behind me was a sign, building plot for sale, dead centre was a beautiful Weeping Ash, and on the border a Superb Copper Beech. Milligan thinks! those trees should have a preservation order on, so I contacts those bails of fire the Barnet Borough Council, & lo, they speak and say Yes the Copper Beech has a Preservation Order, but, ha ha, not the tree in the middle of the plot (the Ash). . second letter. "Why is the Weeping Ash, which is rarer than the Beech unprotected? They answer, (wait for it), because of its condition, Gadzooks! is it pregnant? I call unto me those fellows Men o' the Trees, who inspect the Ash with the sort of loving care a Dutch Jeweller would handle the Hope Diamond, they talk of the tree as "her". "She's orlrite, fact is she's un beauty, nought wrong with her." I pass their observations to the Barnet Borough Council, but they, like the sons of fun they are, insist that their expert is more expert than the Men o' the Trees. So, I'm faced with the task of saving the trees, how much is the land? The Vendor, friend of mine says, Spike it's £50,000 but in cash £15,000, we settle for £12,000, but I haven't a penny, but ha ha, here come de judgment day. A South African Entrepreneuner has been making me offers to go to the Vile Fascist Country, so Fascist that it has a Jewish community nearly as big as England's (quick! pen and paper, write, Dear Sir, How dare Spike Milligan say, etc, etc, etc.). The offer to appear is exactly £12,000, so I went there, making sure that my contract stated that I appear for "multi racial audiences".

I made sure that I always took the coloured stage staff to a restaurant after the show, (as food tasters, of course), they were a bit amazed with them, Howzat? Out?

I went and did a show for the Asian community, did a couple of gigs for coloured schools, went to Soweto on Sharpeville Rememberance Sunday (I had to get a permit). I was the only white person in the Church, the Vicar asked me, "are you from de Police", the crux of it all was with the £12,000 I bought the building land, so with Fascist moncy I saved two trees from destruction by English bureaucracy, so, when these jokers who can't wait to put the finger "Racialist" on you, they might at least investigate the

In every other Eden beyond this sceptred Isle there is a serpent, and sometimes two: "Use a walking stick in snakeinfested areas - they might attack the stick rather than you - and carry a torch at night".

There is an old, laborious schoolboy joke about "enjoying the trip" which is sometimes produced when someone falls over. Micropharm Ltd, the publishers of Have a Good Tripl seem to have horrowed from its humour, planting instructional banana skins along the routes of all our holiday ambidons. Although representing private enter-prise, the inexpensive booklet (50p, 23 passport-sized pages) includes a contribution from the Health Education Council and has their endorsement.

Smokers and drinkers will find this encouraging. "Have a good trip" may signify but a faint flicker of energy diverted from the HEC's attention to their habits, but it's nice to have the no-no's passed around a bit. This catalogue of recreational negatives even tells you when to clock-in and out of sunbathing. "For the first few days, you should not sunbathe in northern Europe between I 1.00 am and 3.00 pm or in places near the equator between 10.00 am and 4.00 pm. And then, of course, there's the insurance? Did Sir Richard Burton pack his antihistamine cream?

I hope it isn't quite medical nonsense to suggest that if you're a regular traveller, then high level protection can be counterproductive. After years of travelling in Europe it would never occur to me to avoid the local tap water and this nonchalance, I believe, has now accustomed my system to minor, non-British water-borne bugs.

Then there's insurance. I wish 1. had a pound for every pound I've spent on travel insurance. At onc time I held the superstitious belief that a package policy possessed the properties of a magic amulet, and that if you didn't take out insurance, some divine and vengeful broker-inthe-sky would send flood, plague, earthquake and defective deck

I then realized that for the past three years I had also been uncovered in France, Greece, Italy. Hungary, Mauritius, Singapore, Vancouver and Barbados.

I had started travelling so much and for so many reasons and at such short notice that it had become an effort to remember my passport, never mind my policy. And nothing happened. True, this may have been good timing more than good fortune.

The ship which had taken me round the coast of Indonesia caught fire and sank off Alaska on its next voyage. The Bay of Naples, on whose frutti di mare I had grazed, became pestilential with hepatitis. The day I left Mauritius, some ishermen caught and killed a Great complaint about Have a Good Trip. Despite the giddy complacency and blithe recklessness of my attitude to holiday health. I was prepared to take advice from the section headed "Bites, Stings and Creepy Crawly Things" on the subject of my one major phobia about foreign parts.

Which brings me to a final

But Mr B. T. O'Boyle, who put the booklet together, and the Health Education Council, who blessed it, are singularly unhelpful in this area. They offer only one curt reference:

Panda to everyone's taste

The giant panda, when you consider it carefully, is really a useless creature with little more than its deceptively charming appearance to commend it. Even the most passionate conservationists recognize that the millions of pounds squandered annually on attempts to increase its numbers could be far more profitably spent on other species, some of which, if not so vacuously cuddlesome, are at least edible or intelligent.
In public relations terms, however, the beast is nothing if not big business. Apart possibly from David Bellamy, it is all that millions of know about conservation and all they need to know. Its stylized teddy-bear features are ubiquitous as the emblem of the World Wildlife Fund; it is one of China's most sought-after exports, and its potency as a fund-raiser and focus of zoological research ultima-tely demolishes the arguments of those who would dismiss it as an evolutionary dead end. Apart from its notorious sexual and thus procreative inefficiency, the giant panda's general unfitness for survival is programmed into the ludicrously specialized habitat it requires. It feeds, for example, primarily on a few species of

Those species, in an uncanny parallelism to the animal they support, have, over millennia, evolved a complicated and slow reproductive method: they flower on average every 80 years and then die off for several years before regener-ating. The result is famine. One such famine, in the 1970s, killed 138 pandas, more than one tenth of the estimated panda population in Such famines are localized - not all species of bamboo burst into flower at once all over China - and in the past have been easily overcome by the pandas themselves. It was simply a matter of shifting their lazy butts to the nearest hillside. In a fairly small reserve

THE MORTGAGE MAGNET

Home ownership has long been the savings market could not feature the housing market high among British priorities. In avoid queues forming. The which helps spread demand to this sphere, at least, the individrecent 1½ per cent rise in their other sectors of the economy. It ual ambitions of millions of voters have been fully reflected in public policy. The years since 1979 have seen a plethora of new measures and decisions aimed at promoting owner-occupation and aiding bouse buyers. The right to buy council homes will swell the number of new mortgages hy some 200,000 to around million this year and nearly double the number of first-time buyers. This year alone, the limit on tax relief on interest has been raised to mortgages up to £30.000; the Finance Act has opened the wholesale money markets to the building societies; and a court decision will allow hem to issue index-linked nortgages at low nominal interest rates for the first time.

It is donbtful if so strong ommon and laudable a domstic ambition needs so many irtificial stimulants in order to lourish; especially those that ause dubious distortions in the nousing and financial markets.

Popular as such measures indoubtedly are, their success iraws yet more of the country's savings into the bousing market at the expense of productive ousiness. Informed estimates suggest that an extra £15 billion will flood into new house mortgages this year, more than the increase in bank credit to the rest of the economy, even at a time of business recovery.

Of more immediate concern, the current bonsing boom, and the building societies' determination to minimize rationing by queue, threaten to keep the money supply well above target, :o encourage the sort of financial instability that undermined ecovery prior to the oil crisis in 1973, and to beighten the task has been made harder by the ikelihood of higher interest rates for the economy as a whole.

After two slack years the at an annual rate of about 13 per cent, drawing in more would-be buyers anxious not to miss out. The building societies drew on their reserves to meet demand but, given strong competition in stabilized matters, helping both to slow the rise in prices and double the monthly inflow of funds. But this has only been achieved at a price. Building society deposits are included in wider measures of the money supply and these were leading the general breaking of monetary targets before the effects of the latest increase in deposits. These wider money measures must take on ever greater significance as it becomes clear that many wealthier borrowers, egged on by private financial advisers, are abusing mortgage tax relief to borrow more than they need on changing houses to pay incidental bills, spend in the shops, or invest in other financial assets.

More directly, the extra deposits must come from somewhere. In this case, the building societies are competing heavily. with banks and the Government for savings. Competition with banks has now gone beyond the high street into the money markets, where the societies hope to raise £4 billion in certificates of deposit, a market of only £11 billion, hitherto dominated by the banks. There is plenty of money in wbolesale markets at this time of year, but, come the autumn, competition is bound to increase bank costs, adding pressure to raise interest rates at a time when industry is anxious to avoid any such jolt.

This is no criticism of the building societies. They are doing their job within the rules set by public policy. Their role has been increased by the transfer of council bouse finance to the private sector. And their erratic behaviour of banks, which leapt in to seize more than a third of the mortgage market housing market suddenly took on easy terms last year, then off earlier this year. House prices drew back, leaving the building were, on some estimates, rising societies struggling to fill the gap and live with the effects of last year's competition on lending borrowing rates seems to have is possible to allow for this by adjusting money targets, but as the 1972-73 period showed, it is hard to return to a more normal course of money growth without disruptive rises in interest rates. The financial cycle has its own dynamic which does not wait on economic policies.

> The way to ease these problems is to reconsider public policies towards bousing incentives. It has long been realized that, within the limits set by alternative land use, the price of houses is largely determined by people's ability to pay for them. In the long run, tax reliefs are merely soaked up in higher prices, leaving the next round of buyers no better off. Morteage relief on the extra £5.000 has already produced some signs of higher than avarage price increases at the upper end of the housing market. Until this happened, there was a tacit understanding that inflation would whittle away tax relief in a relatively painless manner. It would be wholly impractical to abolish tax reliefs overnight, but reasonable by annual instalments over a period. This would not merely ease growing finan-cial pressures. It would when completed make possible a 21/2 pence cut in the standard rate of income tax and avoid both crosssubsidies and abuses of the

> Today, we are still moving in the opposite direction. It is unjust, for instance, that an increase in the mortgage rate by clipping public revenue should require tax increases, cuts in public services, or sales of more shares in British Petroleum. If inflation-linked mortgages make any impact, we shall see a further comparative rise in low-price housing to destroy lasting benefits to first-time buyers and needlessly draw more savings into housing. The time has surely come when the integral importance of housing in the financial system should be recognized and public policies to encourage home ownership

It is not a world that one would wish to wake up and find oneself trapped in. The artist, the Victorian painter Richard Dadd. was trapped for 40 years in a world of obsessive delusions that the atmosphere of the painting communicates haunting impressions of. As a young man he murdered his father in a fit of insanity, and he spent the rest of his life in mental hospitals, continuing to work, industriously and in almost total critical

> The anonymous buyer is foreign, and the Government bas refused an export licence. This gives British interests until November to match the bid and keep the picture in a public collection here. But the freakishly high price has made galleries slow to come forward to raise the money, and in the current economic climate, with so many other calls on their resources, they can scarcely be blamed.

> In our recent correspondence about the painting, one reader complained not unreasonably that whenever a work of art is threatened with export a chorus of protest goes up as if it was at risk of falling into the clutches of barbarians. There is indeed an insularity about some campaigns to retain works having no special links with this country, by artists already well represented bere. There is a general cultural case for the diffusion of major works and there are commercial and libertarian aguments for not interfering unduly with the market.

But compared to the scale of the outflow the chorus does not but it is safe to predict that if the go up so very often. The picture does leave Britain, it will committee which reviews export still be missed then.

licences receives thousands of applications a year, and delays approval in only a handful of cases in all categories - only nine times last year. It only imposes its temporary bar in cases of exceptional significance from the aesthetic or scholarly points of view, or because of close connexions with British history or national life.

"Oberon and Titania" fully deserves to qualify on at least two of these three counts. It is the second finest example of the rare work of an artist wbo, apart from the intrinsic quality of bis work, is a figure of exceptional psychological interest, in illustrating the theme of the interplay between genius and insanity in nineteenth and twentieth century art. The painting is also of some significance as a monument to Victorian society's treatment of the mentally ill, which our own age has no occasion to be condescending about.

There is no doubt that it deserves to qualify: but does it deserve to qualify at the price? Any public collection with foresight could have had it for £7.000 in 1964 (even in real terms, less than a tenth of this year's price). But in 1964 £7,000 seemed decidedly steep. No one can say whether £550,000 will seem steep or modest when another 20 years have passed:

Student unions

From Ms Jane Taylor

Sir, Roger Scruton comes from a crop of Thatcherite ideologues who make their reputations by promoting extremist ideas in the name of "sweet reasonableness". His article on student unions ("Pros and conned on the campus", August 2) is a case in point linking by inference the work of full-time (sabbatical) student union officers with a supposed conspiracy for left-wing takcover of society.

Mr Scruton's image of the job done by student full-timers is wishful thinking, It's not sit-ins or protests which dominate their time, but rather running complex and sophisticated unions with np to £1 m turnover, developing substantial commercial services; dealing with innumerable grant, housing and welfare problems; and contributing to social, sporting and educational aspects of college life.

If student unions did not employ full-timers and staff to manage their affairs, I suspect Mr Scruton would jump at writing Times articles on the incompetence and irresponsibility of mere students controlling. public funds.

Campus magazine has very little to do with "the innocence of student politics", as Mr Scruton suggests. It was launched, and is now run by former prominent members of the Federation of Conservative Students, including one who later became its chairman - ie a full-time. party-paid student organiser. Amongst its early "satirical" articles Campus carried a two-page defence of South African apartheid.

As the largest student partypolitical organisation, Federation of Conservative Student's societies do very nicely out of public funds. NUS will always defend their right to organise amongst students. We will also continue to defend students' democratic right to oppose and protest against further erosion in the amount and standard of education on offer to the people of this country.

Perhaps Mr Scruton could find some equally serious problem to exercise his undoubted intellectual capacities? Yours faithfully, JANE TAYLOR, National Secretary, National Union of Students, 461 Holloway Road, N7. August 2.

Prisons policy

From Mr John Wheeler, MP for Westminster North (Conservative) Sir, On July 29, for the thirtieth time, 74-year-old Mr Fred Hill was sent to one of our overcrowded prisons for 30 days. His offence was refusing to pay fines imposed because he will not wear a crash helmet when he rides a motor cycle. Mr Hill says he fought for freedom in the Second World War. The cost of his imprisonment will be about £700 to the taxpayer.

Meanwhile, in Whitehall, Treasury ministers struggle to curb public expenditure. Our prisons contain 6,500 petty offenders, sentenced for non-violent crimes connected with property, each serving an average of 12 months, at a cost of £7,500 to the taxpayer. So, apart from the cases of the Fred Hills of this world and before we curb worthwhile public expenditure, might the Chancellor have a word with the Home Secretary? In 1981-82, total expenditure on the prison service in England and Wales was over £502m, but is it all worth it and has not the time come to reassess both purpose and policy? Yours faithfully, JOHN WHEELER,

From the Director of Social Services housing and no more than 7 per cent of Warwickshire County Council

Sir, May I enlist your assistance to dissuade some of our most distinguished politicians from referring to elderly people as a burden on the working population.

Apart from the gratuitous offence to a section of the community who, by definition, have done more than the rest of us to create our national wealth and are therefore entitled to share in it, the basis for these attacks is ill-informed.

For instance, the number of people over the age of retirement has actually been falling for some time and while the number of people in the very oldest age groups cootinnes to increase, the number of people over the age of 75 years will reach its maximum in 1991 and then continue steady until the end of the

The number of people who are even older will continue to rise, although this is more than compensated for by the decrease in the "young elderly" group and the numbers involved are so small that they hardly constitute a threat to the national economy.

Furthermore, far from being unduly burdened by the number of dependants, both young and old, there has never been a time when the ratio of people of working age has been so high. It is hardly the fault of the children or the old people if we cannot better manage our affairs to ensure that more of the 'workers" are actually in employ-

Far from being a burden on health and social services, the facts are that over 90 per cent of elderly people live and die in their own homes, making no more than marginal extra demands on their general prac-titioners, who receive an extra allowance for their trouble. It is only a small minority who seek or nee specialist care in hospital or an old people's home or even sheltered

Typhoid in Kos

From Dr Alex Sakula Sir. It is ironic that the outbreak of typhoid which is currently hitting the headlines should have centred on Kos, an Aegean island which, from ancient times, has been associated with the promotion of health and healing.

Kos was famous throughout the ancient world for its Asklepicion, where the cult of Asklepios, the Greek god of healing, flourished for many centuries. Moreover, it was in Kos that, in the fifth century BC, Hippocrates, the father of modern medicine was born.

Because of its climate and natural beanty Kos has in recent years become a popular holiday resort, but it is also a mecca for pilgrims - both medical and others - who visit the ruined Asklepieion and also linger under the great plane tree, the descendant of the original under which Hippocrates practised and taught medicine 25 centuries ago. and the museum-going public. Given, moreover, the existence world wide of institutions able to pay high prices, no fiscal change by HM or any other government such as Mr Selkirk advocates (July 23) is likely significantly to depreciate the international valuation of British antiquitles.

I doubt the desirability of trying to prevent the export of the trapping bought hy a Continental dealer, for it is no Iron Age "Contradiction. Oberon and Titania." Export would create no dangerous precedent, for British antiquities have long been sold abroad, as diversely as to Australia, California and Canada. Nor do I see why they should not be. #### On the other side of farming fence

From Mr Michael Saunders Watson Sir, For the third time in three months you have published an article highly critical of the arable farmer. There was the double act of Richard Body and Lord Melchett in April, then there was your leader on oilseed rape (May 30) and now we have David Hart (feature, August 2).

You may have balanced these with an article giving the opposite viewpoint, but if so I am afraid I missed it and all three are so subjective, their facts so overstated, that the impression given to an uninformed reader must by now be that all arable farmers are beli-bent on destroying the countryside at the taxpayers' expense. I am an arable farmer and I have removed hedges to create field sizes of 50 acres or so in order to allow the most efficient use of my equipment. I have, however, planted many hundreds of trees in field corners and hedgerows to compen-sate and no hedge has been removed without the most careful consideration of the effect on the overall shape of the landscape. I hate those palls of smoke clouding a summer sky, but I, too hurn straw because I have to remove the surplus I cannot sell and to disinfect the field before cultivation, By using these techniques we have doubled our yield in the past ten years. We had to do this to stay in business, as in the latter half of the 1970s prices so lagged behind costs that it was only by increasing yield that we were able to keep going. Nineteen eighty-two reversed this trend, however, and we have been able to re-equip properly for the first time in eight years in preparation for a leaner future. There is an alternative, which is to remove the support from agriculture and allow world markets to operate. We should then be competing with the vast American prairie system of low input and low output farming. The ensuing loss of hedgerows would only be equalled by the loss of jobs.

this to include the provision of Planning controls might prevent the former, if they were implemented quickly enough, but it would be the end of the British cereal farmer. We should return to the position of the 1930s, when most of our food was imported and much land would be left derelict. The poppies would flourish ooce more and Mr Hart would be happy until one day he found there was no bread

m the shops. Most farmers are conscious of the need to balance conservation with production, but there is a danger that if the present outcry continues unabated they may be driven to desperate measures to protect their position. The situation described as the norm by Mr Hart could well become a reality, in which case, heaven help us! There are two sides to this question, therefore, and both need to be heard if we are to maintain food production without destroying the countryside.

Yours faithfully, MICHAEL SAUNDERS WATSON Rockingham Castle, Markel Harborough, Leicestershire.

From Mt W. F. de Salis Sir, David Hart's shrill diatribe (feature, August 2) on the influence of the farming lobby misses the point because he fails to record the views of the general public. A recent public opinion poll conducted by the British Market Research Bureau showed that 75 per cent of people believe that farmers and landowners do a good joh looking after the countryside.

Despite changes in farming methods, the public still rank the landscape and scenery top of their list in the benefits which people get from the countryside. They would not have done this if farmers and landowners had ruined the country-

There is, of course, a need for major changes in the common agricultural policy. Hopefully British politicians will work towards changes which will ensure the continuing prosperity of British agriculture. British food can provide more employment between farmgate and the housewife's shopping basket than can food imported from our European neighbours.

It is surely time that political commentators in Britain changed their craft from one of knocking success stories to one which applauds them. Yours faithfully,

Mole among hounds

From the Chairman of the British Field Sports Society

Sir, On August 2 The Times gave prominence ("Spectrum") to a report about a man who served a nine-month prisoo sentence for desecrating the grave of the legend-ary huntsman, John Peel, and who bas been following hunts with a camera to record their activities on behalf of the League Against Cruel Sports. When Peel's grave was vandalised his bones and those of his relatives were scattered around the church precincts and an obscene message left behind.

That those who direct the League Against Cruel Sports can give credit to such a man or to such trickery may be no surprise to the many country people who suffer from their activities hut it must be asked whether bona fide sympathisers can still believe in this organisation. Mr Huskisson/Wright/Wilkins - or whatever his current cover name may be - has at least done a public service by demonstrating the fact. Hunts are open to all comers and it is absurd to say they have been "infiltrated". People who follow the hounds are accepted in good faith. Country sportsmen have nothing to hide and if those responsible offend against the accepted code of conduct they may expect to suffer for it. If their opponents have a case at law why do they not bring it instead of parading such duplicity?

The Director of the League Against Cruel Sports was reported yesterday (August 3), again in The limes, as ready to re-employ Mr Huskisson whom he had previously referred to as "the best undercover agent we've ever had".

In an overwhelmingly urban society country sportsmen must face

First-class returns

From Mr G. C. W. Beazley Sir. First-class day-return tickets withdrawn by British Rail will be quickly restored, according to undertakings given my committee, if the ticket can be justified financially. However, we have been told by senior BR management at York that there is no way BR can assess receipts from any single type of ticket. They only know total revenue collected at any station; therefore they have no idea at all whether first-class day returns produce more or less revenue

Bedford and Lnton are deprived of the choice of first-class travel at peak hours and cannot buy firstclass day returns at off-peak times when the main line service calls at Bedford and Luton and the trains are running at less than 50 per cent seat occupancy.

We fear total withdrawal of firstclass accommodation by stealth from London suburban and provincial secondary services. As representatives of the traveller the transport users' consultative committees will challenge BR's policy on this issue and seek implementation of reinstatement of first-class day returns nationally and first-class accommodation on the "Bed-Pan" line.

Entry to Bar

From Sir Frederick Lawton Sir, Your summary (July 29) of Mr

Walter Merricks's article in a recent issue of the New Law Journal associated the Senate of the Inns of Court with a proposal which I put before the Advisory Committee on Legal Education at its last meeting.

The Bar is not, and in my professional lifetime has never been, concerned to exclude anyone with the wrong background, the wrong accents or the wrong faces; but it may want to exclude those who have the wrong attitudes to the law, the courts and chents. What the Bar is concerned with is training those who have the right qualities for practice. Training facilities are limited. The Senate has will probably have to help with the selection of entrants. My proposal was that the help might best be given in a standard form of report which commented on an applicant's qualities which were relevant to practice. Academic ability is one quality but many outstanding examinees fail in practice whilst others who scraped through their examinations become leaders of their profession.

What does matter is an ability to express oneself well, both orally and in writing. Accents are irrelevant. Many accents are used by barristers. Lord Denning's Hampshire burr and the late Mr Justice Swift's Lancasthem. An entrant to the profession who cannot get on with the other members of his chambers or establish a rapport with his clients is likely to fail - and those who come from wealthy and influential backgrounds often have difficulty in this respect, Somehow those responsible for selecting entrants to the School of Law will have to identify those with the requisite qualities. They are to be found in students from varying social and financial backgrounds. It is a myth that the Bar is recruited from the moneyed classes. I did not come from them, nor did many of my friends at the Bar and on the Bench.

Yours sincerely FREDERICK LAWTON, Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Legal Education, Royal Courts of Justice, Strand, WC2.

can possibly support or give credence to such an organisation any longer. Yours faithfully. STEPHEN HASTINGS, Chairman, Bruish Field Sports Society, 59 Keonington Road, SEI. August 4.

Theatre Museum

From Mr James R. Hodsman Sir, Has not the time come for Mr Norman St John-Stevas and the arts lobby to grant us a period of silence on the subject of the Theatre Museum?

The state assumes - quite rightly awesome responsibilities for national defence, education, health care and social welfare and the nation as a whole - with varying priorities - supports these projects. I am sure that the majority think it right that the state should then go on to give aid to cultural activities and the preservation of our heritage.

But how remote from reality can yon get? A playwright's work may be said to be one stage removed from real life, its interpretation two stages and a museum of interpretations three. Faced with the heavy cost of conserving the buildings and artefacts of our true past, thinking persons must surely accord a very low priority to the preservation of theatrical enhemera. Yours faithfully.

the Jewish people have a special part in this, but to fulfil this destiny Israel has to get rid of "all injustices, segregations, discriminations, intolerances resulting from the years of exile", and this would be more of a victory than anything that could be achieved by "many squadrons of Phantoms and Mirages".

How to achieve these farreaching aims? A personal experience convinced Chouraqui that the way is to be found through silence.

My spirit became more and more attentive to the contemplation of the Creator. A certain kind of silence sometimes makes possible the revealing of God's presence and his voice. While the world was crumbling in the fracas of war, I deprived of his French citizenship by the Vichy government on account of being Jewish, and himself "riveted without hope fought in the Maquis in a unit on the cross with the nails of the

Council out of touch, Runcie says

Vancouver (Reuter) - A wide gap exists between the World Council of Churches and "ordinary Christians in the pew", the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr Robert Runcie, said

Average church members were more concerned with personal faith and morals than with the council's bigh-level moves for religious unity or programmes for social change, be told Reter on Thursday.

Dr Runcie, who is in Vancouver at the head of the Church of England's delegation to the council's governing assembly, said the council's occasionally controversial countil a occasionally controversual ecumenical group was seen as out of touch by the average churchgoer.
There was "less coolness" about the Anglican Chuch taking part in the council than two years ago, but the archbishop noted that be would have to give an account of the council's assembly actions when the Church of England's synod meets in November.

Representatives from about 300 Protestant, Orthodox and Anglican churches with about 400 million members are attending the assembly, which ends on August 10.

Dr Runcie said it mained to be seen whether the will of the 800 delegates to the assembly would be carried ont during the 18-day meeting or whether the council's pronouncements and programmes would merely be a "predetermined" reflection of what the council staff wanted.

is would be interesting to see how for the real spirit of the assembly comes through

Noting that the assembly was the first he had attended. Dr Runcie said he was pleased that there seemed to be a greater emphasis on worship and theology as a counter-balance to the council's widely publicized identification with rad-

Under the auspices of the London Hospital Simpson went to the Mayo Clinic (USA) where his interest io hormones and endocrinology can be said to have begun. These were exciting days because the hormooes of the pituitary and adrenal gland and of the ovaries and testes were first being isolated and ideotified.

an endocrinologist and wrote prolifically about the treatment of Addison's disease, Cushing's disease, diseases of the pituitary eland, the causes of hirsuitism in women and the effects of having two diseases, namely diabetes and Addison's disease simultaneously.

One of his greatest interests was in obesity and the description he gave of this disease in childhood remains a classie even today. With great perception he pointed out in lectures and repeated clinical demonstrations at the Royal Society of Medicine that obesity should not be equated simply with gluttony, and be always maintained that the major cause of obesity was an imbalance of hormones and a complex metabolie problem, an attitode that accords with modern thought today.

Simpsoo's contribution to the subject of elinical endocrioology was made possible not only by his years at the Mayo Chaic, but by spending three research years at the Lister Institute io London working with Korenchevsky on daughter. Georgina.

When shipowners reject repudiation

Clea Shipping Corporation v Bulk Oil International Ltd Before Mr Justice Lloyd

Judgment delivered July 291 Where charterers of a vessel repudiated a time-charter but the owners elected to treat the charter as continuing and kept the vessel at the disposal of the charterers until expiry of the charter, the owners were enfitted to damages rather than hire-payments for the period in the absence of a legitimate interest in performing the time-charter rather than claiming damages.

Mr Justice Lloyd, delivering a Mr Justice Lloyd, delivering a reserved judgment in the commercial court of the Queen's Bench Division, upheld an arbitrator's award that Clea Shipping Corporation, owners of the Atlantic Trader, were not entitled to retain payments of hire paid by the charterers, Bulk Oil International Ltd, in respect of a perind from the charterer's repudiperiod from the charterer's repudi-ation of the charter to the expiry of

Mr Anthony Colman OC and Mr. Richard D. Jacobs for the owners; Mr Julian Cooke and Mr Christopher C. Russell for the charterers. MR JUSTICE LLOYD said that the vessel was chartered by the owners to the charterers on October 19, 1979 for 24 months 15 days. After she had been in service for vners nevertheless went ahead with the repairs which completed on April 7, 1981.

The owners thereupon informed the charterers that the vessel was again at their disposal, but the charterers declined to give the master any orders and regarded the

Instead of treating the charterer's conduct as a repudiation of the charterparty, the owners kept the vessel at the charterer's disp ready to sail until expiry of the charter on December 5, 1981. in arbitration proceedings the charterers claimed that they were entitled to recover hire in the sum of studed to recover here in the sum or $1,853.310 paid to the owners in respect of the period April to December 1981. The arbitrator held that the owners had no legitimate interest in pursuing their claim for hire rather than a claim for damages and that they should have accept the charterer's repudiation midnight on April 8, 1981. Mr Colman submitted that in a case of repudiation the innocent party had an unfettered right to elect whether to accept the repudia

Whither one took Lord Reid's language in White and Carter (Councils) Ltd ("no legitimate interest"), which was adopted by Lord Justice Orr and Lord Justice Browne in The Puerto Bultrapo, or Lord Denning's language in that case ("in all reason"), or Mr Justice Kerr's language in The Octopied ("wholly unreasonable") there came a point where the court would cease, on general equitable principles, to allow the innocent party to enforce his contract according to its strict legal terms.

How one defined that point was a matter of some difficulty for it involved drawing a line between Dismissing as ex parte application on July 25 for leave to appeal from an order of Mr Justice Latey who on June 8 said that a solicitor had a right of audience on the hearing of a High Coert judgment summors. Sir John Donaldson, Master of the Rolls, siting as a single judge of the Court of Appeal, said, during the course of the hearing, that if such a practice had been established by custom in the Right of audience Family Division the petitioner's case for leave to appeal against the judge's order was marguable.

Mr Justice Latey had said that on the hearing of judgment sum monses in open court in the High Court, all solicitors had the right of audience and that that had been the practice in the Family Division since 1942

The refusal of the big City institutions to be panicked into selling saw the Loodon stock market put up a fierce rearguard action in the wake of the overnight weakness oo Wall Street.

The FT lodex eroded an The FT lodex eroded an earlier fall of 7.6 to end the day only 0.6 down at 723.0 - a rise on the account, so far, of 11.8. Leading equines responded to renewed selective support, but overall the general level of turnover remained dull. Distillers was a firm market after hours climbing 3p to 228p as a large buyer appeared, and TI large buyer appeared, and TI Group added op to 160p, after 162p, as analysts continue to reappraise the engineering sec-tor. But falls were seen in Associated Dairies 4p to 160p.

Gilts encountered nervous selling as the pressure for an increase io US interest rates grew. But by the close earlier losses of up to 50p had given way to gains of 25p as fears that the Government Broker was planning to announce a new issue rapidly evaporated. Most of the speculation appeared to emanate from the Futures market.

sale of its anti-plear drug, Zantac, in the US. While the group has been more than encouraged by the sales of the drup over there during its first weeks, it warned it was too early to confirm some of the more optimistic brokers estimates being published.

Some estimates had pushed the drug's share of the anti-ulcer market as high as 12 per cent. This compared with a figure of about 7 per cent estimated by the US drug industry.

Smith & Nephew slipped 1p to 169p ahead of interim figures next week. De Zoete & Bevan, brokers, say the main impetus to growth has crue from medical and healthcare business. De Zpete is looking for pretax profits of £18.2m-an increase of 22 per cent oo the corresponding period-and is recommending the shares as a buy.

Mr Brian Wolfson, the Granada director, now in control of Anglo-Nordic emerges as the interested party eyeing Weeks Associates. Weeks said Thursday that no terms were suggested and no further dis-cussions have taken place since the initial approach from a company they would not name. At yesterday's closing price of 21p, the shares sit op under asset value and are still showing a 30 per cent jump over Thursday.

Scottish Northern Investment Trust has reduced its stake in Energy Finance and General Trust, unchanged at 44p, with the sale of 500,000 restricted voting shares. It oow holds i million shares, amounting to 10.15 per cent of the equity.

Wearwell, the East-London textile group, was a firm market after hours climbing 7p to 73p. Recently the group headed by Mr Asil Nadir, the Turkish entrepreneur, took a 51 per cent stake in local rival loter-City lovestments. Mr Nadir is helieved to he muching sheed believed to be pushing ahead with plans to merge all three of his publicly quoted companies later this year.

For the seadog, who loves to arrive in a strange harbour and appreciates skilful pilotage and the niceties of coming alongside in all weathers, this is a special new and fascinating experience,

Eleven ships maintain the service. We took one of the newest and largest, the Midnatsol under the command of Captain Bard Edvarsen. She is odd to look at, but ships have been getting uglier since they started putting engines in them. Of all-welded construction, she has widely flared bows, slab sides and her upper works are pushed right forward. Above her rail she has four decks surmounted by a "greenhouse" giving an excellent all-round view.

The after deck is arranged for containers, with space for 40 cars in a hangar beneath. A large crane occupies the middle of this deck, pushing the single rectangular funnel to one side; logical but not pretty. The engines are in the stern under the hanger. The Midnatsol being a very manoeuvrable "high technology" sbip, everything is controlled from the bridge, a quiet place where an officer in an armchair, wearing bedroom slippers, sits surrounded by controls, knobs and alongside, and the moment she did see some conservation and dials, very much like the flight deck of an aircraft.

The passenger accommoda-tion is excellent. Interior design cabins, with shower, basin and lavatory are roomy for one, three. Public rooms are comfortably furnished, and a lift makes life easier for the oldies. In the dining room excellent fish is plentiful and well served.

An almost continuous chain of skerries - flat-topped rocks - form a breakwater along the west coast of Norway, upon which the rollers of the North Sea pound with a constant roar. become small islands to which buildings cling like limpets. Then come the larger islands in all shapes and sizes. Our route runs between them and the fjord-indented mainland.

stantly, offering linle repose to those who want to see everything. We head for a narrow channel between two islands whose slopes plunge straight into the water. The texture of the rocks varies greatly - some are smooth and benign, others harsh and terrifying in their roughness. The view opens out into a wide fjord with distant mountains, then closes again to form another narrow channel, flanked by Bath bun shaped islands where scattered houses crouch in sheltered bays.

In April most low peaks have an icing sugar dusting of snow, which lying more thickly in treat, and for land-lubbers, a crevices creates a striped black and white effect. Colours generally are sombre - grey, black and brown in varied shades depending on the light. Later everything will be green with birch trees. Always when the view opens out there is a distant panorama of jagged and smooth white mountains where unloading goes on simul-the shadows are blue. In the taneously and at top speed, the evening the white snows change to pink in the setting sun.

The scenery in bright sunlight it shone almost all the time is one of immense grandeur which a cloud can turn in an instant to one of menace and foreboding, accentuated, perhaps, by the bright red sail of a fishing boat.

Often when the mountain slopes flatten before entering the water there are timber houses, very neat and prim, and traditionally painted in all the pale colours of the rainbow. Fishermen's houses stand on piles at the water's edge with a moored fishing boat alongside.

A red mail van waits, and two men arrive to take the warps. The Midnatsol is laid several fork-lift trucks hurtle to unload the mail and merchandise. Goods for loading are waiting in stacks. Loading and trucks avoiding each other like seagulls on the wing.

A loudspeaker warns that the ship is about to leave. The ramp and gangway are hauled up, warps cast off, one blast on the hooter and we are away. The operation may have taken 20 minutes or two bours, but we are always on time.

Few towns look their best from the docks, Trondheim, Norway's third largest city, is no exception. Warehouses, lorry parks, marshalling yards and general mess keep the ship at arm's length. It is only in the small towns that the quays are close to the centre, and even there, brand new storebouses are replacing the handsome old timber buildings. However we is moored the quay comes to preservation of wooden build-lowered from her side and Tromsø, where, in sharp contrast, a huge high-level concrete bridge spans the fjord.

The North Cape was named by the British explorer Richard Chancellor in 1553, and Admiral Lord Fraser took it as his title after the Second World War. It is very large and intimidating; black, precipitous, potentially storm-swept and a thousand feet high. We rounded slowly and with proper

Many ports were virtually obliterated during the war, Most like Hammerfest, the world's northeromost town, were rebuilt without imagina-tion. Kirkenes, the turning point of our voyage, where magentite is mined, is another.

As we steam further north the weather has become noticeably colder, though no less brilliant. At Kirkenes a thin film of ice covers the water, with deep snow ashore.

There is however one exception to this lack of imagination Kristiansund, an internal life. An enormous ramp is ings going on, particularly in barbour surrounded by fine timber buildings all painted white or pale green, pink, grey or brown. Although grievously damaged, the town has been rebuilt in the traditional way. The real architecture of the fjords is in the waterside groups of buildings and an occasional church. The most exciting part of the wbole voyage was the homeward passage from Harstad to Svolvaer in the Lofotens islands. Channels were narrower, banks steeper, precipices more forbidding and mountains more jagged. It was a microcosm of the whole trip which included two of the most interesting harbours and a terrible pong of

we were lucky with the weather. We had expected it to be bad. There were only 26 of us on the round trip, but plenty of shorthaul passengers, who seemed to spend their time below. We had the decks to ourselves. If the ship had been full, meals would have been in relays, decks crowded and people in the public rooms sitting on each other's knees.

The real menace came from hordes of rampaging children. On one night passage 300 of them slept (or rather didn't sleep) in halls, alleyways and even the lift. We lashed them with our tongues at 3 am, but to little effect. We reflected that we were there on sufferance for, after all, this was really a bus

The water piled high and broke over us, cold enough to make us gasp, and then whoop with exhilaration. Sideways, forward, tossed about like James Bond's Martini, we were through in seconds. We looked back at the water, white and powerful, and felt wonderful.

After that is was plain sailing. The rapids became et times more difficult, more dangerous "if you don't paddle very hard". To stay in the boat, you lean against the side, propping yourself up on the big tube, and balancing by pressing your foot against that of the person opposite.

I loved it, even the cold, the wet and the initial fear. After the first drop, the fear became exhilaration and excitement, tinged with an awareness that it was a little dangerous, and one's scar in the boar was precarious in the extreme. The men on the banks with ropes and in the kayaks were not there for show. and they became very attentive before each rapid - if one of us had fallen out, they had to do something about it pretty quickly. Stanley Kowalski's Wilderness Tours take thousands of people down the river every year with no casualties. People are lossed out, but are retrieved without injury. problem of finding a suitable dolls' house for his small daughter, Alexandra, Dr Andreas Papadakis, Editor of Architectural Design magazine, iried the loyshops and did not like what he saw. He lit on the novel plan of inviting the architects of the world to compete in designing one for her. For Stage 1 in 1981 contestants submitted drawings and intentions. The interest was amazing. A total of 260 entries was submitted. Of these 50 were selected to prepare an actual model and 20 other renowned architects were also invited to ioin the competition.

The finished entry, fascinatng though it is, does not always convince that all the designers had children io mind. Some patterns are very sophisticated and transform the whole idea of the traditional dolls bouse, They ere in a tradition dating from the seventeenth century when wealthy patrician ladies in Europe assembled their pre-cious collections of miniatures n rooms with tiny, fashionable wax-doll residents. By the eighteenth century the housing of such collections had progressed to little buildings based on fine mansions of the period: two of the most famous may be seen at the homes where were originally sited: the doll house at Nostell Priory, near Wakefield, with furniture attributed to Chippendale design: and the Baby House at Uppark, Sussex, made in about During the Victorian period.

dolls' houses assumed an even more domestic aspect. Realistic copies of actual dwellings, often done by estate carpenters, were lovingly furnished by ladies of the house with miniature watercolours, embroidered hangings, petit-point rugs and prettily dressed doll characters.

This century saw the creation of two marvellous dolls' houses. When his small daughter thought she saw a fairy (in Ireland of course) Sir Nevile Wilkinson planned the amazing "Titania's Palace" at his home Ballynastragh, A veritable treasure house for its invisible fairy occupants, its public exhibition

Set a few yards back the river, the pub's frontage is currently marred by the construction work ("this blasted heath"), and the splendid views across the Thames to St Paul's must be enjoyed from the confines of a small yard with pienic tables and incongruous beach umbrellas.

Nevertheless, the pub's interior is undeniably atmospheric - a maze of low-beamed rooms tilled with "historical London" parapheroalia of varying degrees of credibility. #### Opera first for Rattle

For his third and final year es artistic director of the South Bank Summer Music Festival. which runs from August 14 to 28. Simon Raule is concentrating on Janacek and Sibelius who he has admired since childhood.

Among the Janacek items is the first public performance in Britain of his opera, Osud, which Rattle describes as "an astonishingly beautiful work." It is being given in a concert version and will be sung in its original Czech. The singers include Eilene Hannen, Felicity Palmer and Dennis Bailey. Rattle is also presenting a project on which he has been working with his orchestra, the City of Birmingham Symphony, for three years: the complete cycle of Sibelius symphonies, Numbers 5, 6 and 7 will make up the final concert in the Royal Festival Hall on August 28.

Other artists appearing at the festival are Jessye Norman, the soprano, who is giving a recital of songs by Richard Strauss; Alfred Brendel, with Mozart's Piano Concerto in B flat; end the Philip Jones Brass Ensemble, whose concert comprises works by Praetorius, Paul Patterson. Handel and Saint-

More minimum in the intrests of and more frequently computers efficiency. Wind-tunnel tests, are pressed into service to sort cut design and constrction

Until a few years ago, both the racing yachtsman and the cruising enthusiast had to rely on little more than eye and hand to get the best out of his vessel. Now, however, the marine electronics industry is presenting more and more interesting technical wizardry.

Glassfibre is now considered an almost "traditional" malcrial for huilding yachts, yet iaminating specifications and sub-structure design continue to he modified and improved. The polyamide fibre Kevlar, which is a little less than two thirds the eight of glassfibre, is finding popularity in reinforced resio increasing moulded.

The panel suffocss of flat or thin laminate and the rigidity of internal framing and longitudinals can be improved dramatically by the use of carbon-fibre reinforcement. As the rigidity of hulls has improved, crews have beeo able to take advantage of this and set up their ries under higher tension and better

More and more use is being made of hydraulics where carefully controlled adjustments have to be made to the rigging while it is under load. Hy-draulies are also often used to work a lifting keel or centre-toard and drive the propeller shaft. On larger cruising yachts this form of power transmission may well be used to hoist the uils, supply power to the sheet English, Portuguese and Dutch "oriental" at Harrods

1983 is an Admiral's Cup year and the winches and the anchor wind-lass and take care of the

Sheet and control line handling winches have improved immensely during the past four years. The better quality winches are smooth in operation up from the clutches of the and ruggedly engineered to \mericans. In the Admiral's accept the high loads that can be applied aboard a modern yacht. Gear ratios are carefully selec-ted so that each task is handled as conveniently as possible: the design engineers do their best to see that wasteful internal friction is kept to a minimum.

Perhaps the greatest boon to sheet handling has been the development of the self-tailing winch. Here the final turn of the sheet around the winch is led around its grooved head which grips the rope as it leads off the drum, so that sufficient friction is generated between the rope and the winch for the latter to haul in the clew of the sail. It is the sails which provide the motive power, and here the search for improvement is never-ending. The cloth manufacturers experiment constantly and advertise newly developed materials for which they claim improved stability or finish. The surface must be smooth, to keep friction between air and the cloth of the sail to a experience in top competition and the procouncements of theorists combine to keep the design and construction of sails under constant and vigorous development.

While the racing crew are always looking for something that will give their yacht an edge over the opposition, the cruising enthusiast sets considerable store by coovenience. Furling headsails, which can just be rolled up like a window blind when not required, have been with us for many years. Latest developments, however, allow sails set aft of the mast to be furled just as easily. The design and construction of the handling of the entire rig modern yacht is moving fast becomes very much simplified and the yacht can be sailed snail's pace compared with comfortably hy a young or what amounts to an explosion short-handed crew. Ashley Stephenson

Earlier this year, in the course of an otherwise savagely critical article on the Chelsea Flower Show, Sir Roy Strong, Director of the Victoria and Albert Museum, singled out for praise the garden sculpture of Simon Verity and what he saw as the revival of a dead art through a modern idiom. Rosemary Verey, creator of the garden at Barusley House in Gloucester-shire, responded by importing three works by Verity and allowing him use of her orchard as a abovense. Such action is symptomatic of Rosemary Verey's approach to garden design; she picks the best from each century and weaves each eclectic garden. Rosemary Verey's feeling for esign comes from sixteenth and seventeenth-century gar-dening books, and her feeling for plants and planting from favourites such as Gertrade Jekyll, Vita Sackville-West and Graham Stuart Thomas, From Russell Page she learned about the use of vistas and employed this knowledge when creating the broad herbaceous border which leads to a small classical day, but those that do are also the perfect holiday wines that can be taken to beaches and barbecues and will hlend happily with soda water and ice-cubes. As someone always forgets to pack the corkscrew, carafe wines are especially useful at this time of year. Paul Masson were the first to make Masson were the first to make them respectable over here, three years ago, and it has taken them that long to get their blends right, in my opinion. Their 1983 wines are fruity, palatable and staightforward and definitely the best of the carafes. A new addition to their range it California Dry White (about £3.35 from various off-licences). At 11.5°, it is unlikely to send anybody to sleep in the to send anybody to sleep in the afternoon, while its crisp, appley nose and refreshing fruity taste make it all too casy to drink.

Another light, dry white that can sit in the refrigerator for can sit in the reingerator for hours and not come to any great harm is Muscadet. Although this appellation controlle will never be in the top tier, there are some good examples Pierre Lusseaud for instance, has been one of the most worthwhile wine-makers in the region, and his '82 Château de la Galissonniere (Peter Dominic, £3.10) is one of the best vintages he has ever made. This bone dry, lively, lemony wine, with a good depth of flavour, is actually a Muscadet de Sèvre et Maine, which means that it comes from the heart of the region where the finest wines are produced. It goes well with oysters, and seafood.

Just about the freshest sound of last summer was provided in the Roman amphitheatre of Nice and on the rolling meadow of Knebworth by the Gerry Mulligan orchestra, a big band of seemingly conventional resources but wholly uncommon grace and geniality.

Few musicians have stayed as true to their essential nature over the span of a lengthy career as has Mulligan, whose present music can be traced directly to his earliest recordings of more than 30 years ago. Little Big Horn may develop one or two recent preoccupations, but it represents the very best kind of musical conservatism. Four of its half-dozen tracks

Oedipal Indian myth with song and dance

packing next week's London International Festival of International Festival of Theatre (LIFT '83) there is one welcome return: the Naya Theatre Company from India, one of the great successes of last year's Edinburgh Fringe and immediately transferred to Riverside Studios. Their new piece. Bahadur Kalarin, opens on Tuesday at the Lyric Hammersmith for a fortnight's season, moving to the Bloomsbury Theatre for a further two weeks

Linkie the experantly comic Charan the Thief seen last year, Bahadur Kalarin is based on a tragic and disturbing folk legend from Chhatisgarh, told to the Naya's director Habib Tanvir by elders in the village of Sorar. An ancient carving there showed a beautiful woman and a man: Bahader the winemaker and her son. The son killed his father and married 126 women before realizing his mother was the only woman he could love.

On this legend, with its byious Oedinal overtones, Habib Tanvir worked with his company of singing and dancing actors. As improvization proceeded, their spontanteous dis-like and criticism of the Oedipus figure softened into

ARTISTS OF THE TUDOR COURT Victoria and Albert Museum, Cromwell Road, London SW7 (589 6371). Until Nov 6, Mon-Thurs and Sat 10am-5.15pm, Sun 2.30-5.15pm It is many years since a major exhibition of classic English portrait miniatures took place in London, and meanwhile there have been many changes of critical emphasis and a lot of new scholarship, also, the history and iconography of the Tudor portrait are one of V & A director Sir Röy Strong's specialities. So the present show is both timely and a labour of love: The famous figures, such as Hilliard and Oliver, are present in torce, but the show has its discoveries as well, such as a ternale miniaturist, Levina Teerlinc, who would seem to have taught Hillierd.

the view. When I fold the family that this would be so there was a minor uproar. "We always go to Cornwall, we always stay in the dairy". (converted), "all our triends will be there, and the beach and the bay and the little pub that you love in the valley and how could you be so mean?" "Easily", I said. It took a while for this to sink in. Then they asked why.

Because (I said) whatever the weather now, you know and I know that the moment we cross the Cornish border it will rain. (Last year it rained for 19 of the 21 days). And because, though I too am quite fond of the place. I will do there what I do in London, but more often - cook and wash up and make beds and clean up and nag - not all the time, but enough. And because there are no cleaning ladies or Chinese. Indian or hamhurger take-aways, and because I am fed up with selfcatering holidays.

"We'll help, we promise", they said, "we'll make the beds and wash up and cook breakfast and let you sleep a lot." I knew they meant it. Just as I mean to write to my Aunt Shecla, throw out the clothes I haven't worm for five years or letters from old boyfriends I would not recognize if I bumped into them. knew also that with the best will Spring turned to summer before we studied the brochures. All the hotels abroad we liked (or could afford) were dévolé but fully booked. The prospect of sland-bys and bucket-shop llights did not please; then there was the dog, for whom we could tind no temporary minder at the right time. We had left it too late. The heatwave arrived and like most phlegmatic Britons. we yearned for a cooling breeze. We found it one day on a day trip on a canal, pbut-phutting upstream ...

Conspiratorial glances were exchanged as they brought me, hubbles and ice and insisted I lay on the roof watching the sky. No prizes for guessing where the galley slave will be in a week's time. She has exchanged a vast cooverted dairy for a narrow boat, a double bed for bunks and a rocky coastline for the riverbank. And she only has herself to blame. She is also, as she writes, sending off for the brochures for remote Mediterranean islands and getting a cast-iron commitment for doeminders - for next year.

Talk of the future, more wine, and a resumption of play. It was our time to face the Chanoel 4 star pair. > Anyone who doubts the influence of television may be converted by this story, which I am assured is true: One day a stranger errived at a bridge club and asked if he might play. "I haven't played before", he admitted modestly, "but I think type learned stranger from I've learned enough from watching Grand Slam to give it a go. As the stakes were minimal, the stranger was allowed in. On the first hand, the stranger's partner bid one club, the oext hand passed, and the stranger, after a pause, said: "I have 10 poiots, and two fourcard red suits. It is normal to respond one diamond, but because of the texture of my hearts..."

The rest was laughter. Jeremy Flint

The long, hard road to Wytch Farm

If Mrs Thatcher's first four years tanght this Government anything about privatization, it was surely that converting simple manifesto promises into reality is a terribly frustrating. time-comsuming and complicated business.

Nowhere bas the task proved more sisyphean than with the Government's plans to sell off the British Gas corporation's 50 per cent stake in Wytch Farm. the country's largest on-shore oil field. It is now more than two years since Mr David Howell, then Secretary of State for Energy, first announced the Government's intention to sell the asset. Two energy secretaries later, the process has still not been completed, notwithstanding the fact that the department's original deadline for completing the disposal was the end of the 1981/2 financial year (i.e. 16 and a hit months ago).

A buyer has been found in the form of the Dorset Gronp, a consortium of five independent British oil companies, and the terms of the sale have, after protracted negotiations, finally been approved (by the Government at least, if not by the gas corporation. But once again, the latest deadline for tying np the sale -the middle of last month has come and gone. The hetting is that it will be several weeks before the final legal and contractual issues have been settled, and Wytch Farm moves into the private sector. It is ironic that the Government's original decision to sell the asset by auction to the oil industry, rather than issne shares to the public, was taken in the belief that it would enable the whole process to be wrapped up more quickly. This calculation has proved to be startiogly misguided.

Add to this the fact that British Gas has, hy common consent, had much the better of the argoment about the wisdom of selling off a proven revenue-earning asset during a huyer's market in oil, and it is no surprise that government minister have long since given up boasting about this particular roll-back of the State frontiers.

The price the Government will obtain for Wytch Farm - £80m as an initial payment, and £80m later, followed by further small royalty payments if production reaches certain levels - is hardly a princely sum that justifies the hours of effort that have gone into foreing through the sale against the corporation's

The lessons from the exercise have proved invaluable however in preparing for future privatization.

This is why the Government is handling the proposed sale of the corporation's North Sea oil assets differently. From September I, the assets will be owned and managed directly by the energy department until a share sale or oil industry auction can hy arranged. This will probably take the best part of a

Handling the sale itself is common sense, but also somewhat hizarre. For it means that a non-interventionist and privatizing Government will now be actively running, on a dayto-day basis, a business that it believes it should not

Meanwhile Tricentol. Carless Capel, Clyde and the other British oil companies in the Dorset group are growing old waiting to get their hands on an asset which will play a key role in determining wbether they are to prosper or not in the next few year's tougher oil climate. Who woold bave thought that Tricentrol would get quicker service from the Cbinese, who are expected to sign an exploration deal with them in the next day or two, than they would from their own Govern-

Unit trusts soar in Australia

It was stock markets on the other side of the world which put up the best performance last month. The Australian Metals & Minerals index ended July 11. 3 per cent higher, slightly ahead of the rise recorded by the All Ordinary Index. Reflecting this jump, all but one of the industry's unit trusts specialising in Australia scored an offer price gain of 10 per cent or

Leading the contingent was Lawson Australian and Pacific with a rise of 18.3 per cent, some 2 per cent ahead of Ciartmore Australian, which had previously been one of the markers in this year's overall league table.

Much of the recent rise in Australian share prices has been attributed to renewed overseas interest in the stock- market here. Investors are anticipating that the world economic recovery will mean increased demand for the country's natural resources. Another positive factor has been the Australian Bureau of Agriculture's forecast of a major recovery in the rural sector, which has suffered badly from recent droughts.

Still overhanging the Australian metals and minerals sector is the prospect of the new Labour Government's proposed resources tax.

Buekmaster & Moore, stock-brokers, have warned their private clients against underestimating what the administration may have in mind." While the Labour Government of Mr Hawke is demonstrating a much more pragmatie approach in business than was the case in Gough Whitlam's day, the administration, mindful of the vawning budget deficit, will want to exact its pound of flesh. Gold mining companies, which in the past have escaped the tax nct, could prove quite hard hit."

Another market to put up a strong performance last month was Hongkong's. The Hang Seng index notched up an 11.2 per cent gain on bullish expectations of the outcome of the recent talks between the British and Chinese govern-ments on the political future of the colony. A cut in local interest rates also belped sentiment. Britannia Hong Kong Performance mirrored this renewed optimism with an 11.6 the best package unless you per cent offer price rise, and happen to five in central per cent offer price rise, and Gartmore Hong Kong was 11 per cent higher.

Aiming for youth

In an attempt to woo young savers, Barclays Bank has launched a Super Savers account. When savers open an account with £1 they receive a money manager pack containing membership card, pens, note-pad, ruler, record book, paying in book and a leaflet explaining how to make the most of savings.

The savers also receive a colour magazine three times a year with competitions and special offers. But the interest rate, however, is the normal bank deposit rate of 6 per cant—ordinary bank deposit rate of 6 per cent - ordinary share accounts with any building society offer 7.25 per cent, and extra interest accounts, 8.25 per cent.

High interest share

Argyte Building Society has issued a new high interest income share offering 1.5 per cent above the society's normal investment share rate. At present this amounts to 9.1 per cent per annum - equivalent to 13 per cent gross for a basic rate taxpayer and is paid on the last working day of each month direct into the investor's bank account.

Minimum withdrawals of 2500 can be ample with no loss of interest subject to 60 days' notice. The minimum investment is 25,000 and the maximum 230,000 or £60,000 for joint holdings.

Claim form change

Guardian Royal Exchange has revised its motor claims form to cater for policyholders who wish to report an accident for information only. The new form includes notes in red to help the policyholder, and GRE points out that the completion of the claim form, for nformation only, does not affect your nocialms borus.

The changes have been made as a result of representations made by The Insurance Ombudsman, who has been faced with an increasing number of complaints about insurers settling third party claims without consulting their policyholders. This results in a reducion of no-claims bonus.

Jobs abroad guide

Signal action

Mr John Potter, coordinator of the Signal Life Investors Action Group which represents the interests of those unfortunate investors who lost money in the collapse of Signal Life, has been talking to Mr Alex Fletcher, Minister of State for Consumer Affairs.

'The Minister is very concerned about the Signal affair and is encouraging us to proceed with our test cases against the intermediate who sold these bonds.'

Mr Product self.' Mr Potter said.

Next fandmark in the Signal affair is the meeting of the Committee of Inspection on Thursday at the offices of the liquidator, Mr Gerry Weiss, of Cork Gully. Mr Potter will be representing the interests of investors at the meeting.

Car repair cover

Car repair bills can be a headacha car repair ons can be a readacte – particularly since they tend to be unexpected and unbudgeted for.
The Automobile Association has an interesting new insurance package which gives cover for replacement parts costing more than £75.

Available only to drivers who insura with the AA, Autoparts Plan will cover unexpected repairs to engine, gearbox, suspension, brakes or steering. Planned # expenses such as routine servicing and replacement of tyres, brake pads or exhaust systems are not covered. Care elegible are those up to four years old with up to 50,000 miles on the clock. Cover costs £45 a year for vehicles up to 1750cc, and £79 a year for larger capacity cars. Up to 30,000 miles the policy pays 100 per cent of the total bill, between 30,000 and 50,000 miles 80 per cent.

Crown Life bond

There is a lot be said for certainty, and guaranteed income bonds offer a fixed income over a given period. Latest available from Crown Life is a four-year bond paying 8.75 per cent net of basic rate tax. Minimum investment is £1,000 and capital is returnable in full at the end of the four-year term. There are no age restrictions.

Wealth warning

Sunderland and Shields Building Society is offering 1.75 per cent above the continuous share rate on its new two-year term shares available from September 1. At current interest rates, this amounts to 9 per cent net, equivalent to 12.86 per cent goss for basic rate taxpayers. But be warned, if you want to get your money out, you will have to give three months' notice and lose three months' interest.

Gift ceiling

Anxious to encourage small severs to invest in gits, National Savings has increased the maximum daily purchase of gits listed on the National Savings Stock Register. From September 1, anyone buying stock on the National Savings Stock Register will be able to invest up to £10,000 in any particular stock on any day. The existing limit is £5,000.

Cheitenham success

Insurance

Covering the student risk

Certain categories of people are considered bad risks as far as the insurance world is concerned - journalists, deep sea divers and actors are all viewed with a jaundiced eye. High on this list come students who are believed by the industry to be prone to motorcycle accidents, personal mishaps generally, and not least of all, a high incidence of loss of personal belongings.

As a result, students often have difficulty getting insurance cover. Barclays Bank has just come up with a new insurance package as part of its Student Survival Kit, but it looks expensive compared with the two main alternatives on the market. It is only available to students opening an account with Barclays.

The table shows cover offered by the three main contenders in this field. Barclays premium of £25.50 per annum is the highest a hy a long way though there is a £6 discount on the first halfyearly instalment and the premium thereafter is fixed at £25.50 for the duration of the student's course.

Endsleigh (the student in surance broker) seems to offer London, Liverpool or Man chester, when the Harrison Closer to home, Wall Street recorded a new peak last month.

That's the remarkable performance of two out of six "special offer" man trasts highlighted in our June 1982 Investment Action Report - and our clients were able to invest at a discount! According to Planned Savings Statistics (July 1983), these were the performances of our six recommendations:—

	Value of a £5,900 investment
cimology & Growth erson American Recovery & General Gilt Trust I Hume Pacific I Special Situations nore UK Smaller Companies Recovery	$10,785 $10,048 $ 7,035 $ 6,655 $ 6,465 $ 6,090
	and the same

To judge how good these figures are, it's worth remembering that £5,000 invested in a building society over the same period would have earned interest of £345 for a basic rate taxpayer and even less for a higher rate taxpayer.

To find out what the Investment Action Report is ecommending now, send for your free copy without delay. N.B. It should be remembered that unit values can full as well as rise. While past performance cannot necessarily be taken as a guide to the future, the skills of the management groups involved are clearly well above average.

Cultivating new business ventures

From little acorns, as they say, mighty oaks will grow. But Ms Marion McLaren of Collier Street village in Kent is boping that the pots and plants in her new greenhouses will sprout profits when Spenny Lane Nurscries opens for business shartly, courtesy of the Govern-ment's new Enterprise Allowance Scheme. The scheme has been run for the past year nn a pilnt basis in several parts of the country and went national this week. It is designed to help the unemploy-ment set up in business on their own. Those with a place on the scheme are paid £40 a week for the first year. And Ms Mcbaren was one of the first at her local Jobcentre in Maidstone on

"Living out in the country, starting a nursery seemed a sensible thing to do as I have quite a bit of land attached to my house", she says. "And I could work from home, which is an advantage when you have young children. Over the past few weeks I have been husy huilding-up stocks of bedding plants and organizing the greenhouses in the hope that I can sign-on the scheme."

To qualify for the Enterprise Allowance Scheme, you have to fulfil a number of conditions. You must be on unemployment or supplementary benefit when you apply, and have been out of work or under nutice of children in tow, being tald redundancy for 13 weeks. You about Value Added Tax, bookmusy show you have £1,000 to keeping and all the other things

Ms McLaren said. The bad news is that there is only room for 25,000 people on the Enterprise Allowance Scheme throughout the country.
The number of places available in a particular area depends nn the level of unemployment

Pilot schemes that have been running for the past year indicate that the EAS should be a real success. Mr Barry Phillips, the organizer in Ms McLaren's area, says: The McLaren's area, says: pilot scheme we had in the Medway Towns last year had fall-out rate of between 13 and 16 per cent - much lower than the normal failure rate for new businesses. Officials do not sit in indement on the commercial viability of a venture. It's first come, first served for those who qualify.

Certaio kinds of businesses such as or gambling, anything religious or political, are banned from the scheme. But a Kiss-O-Gram service qualified. Mr Phillips said: "Most of the businesses were more mundane. We had people like blacksmiths starting-up io business io the villages again and quite a lot of people with a traditional craft like furniture-making or renovation signed-on." Anyone, interested in the Enterprise Allowance Scheme should get in touch with their nearest Job centre as soon as

Rubber price's rapid rise sets a market poser

After languishing in the doldrums for nearly two years. rubber is bouncing back. In-deed, the advance in the price over the past six months has been so rapid as to bring it within striking distance of the point at which the buffer stock manager must sell under the International Rubber Agreement. Whether that will happen is a poser for the market, not least because the manager's stock of 270,000 tonnes could have a depressing effect .-

The market is normally quiet at this time of year. But in the last two months the spot last two months the spot London Price of RSS I has gone up by 10p a kilogramme to almost 83p. The September price is around 1p more. This means that rubber is over the "may self" level of 240 Malaysian cents a kilogramme.

The buffer stock manager has indicated that he might sell half way between the "may sell" price and the "must self" price of 249 cents.

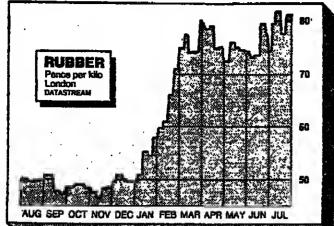

Not only has the market's capacity to absorb selling from the stockpile improved; senti-ment has also been considerably cheered by the thought that a huyer may be waiting in the wings in the American strategic stockpile, which recently said that it waoted a big increase in its rubber holdings.

Many market experts view this cautiously since the stockpile will have to get the funds from Congress, and this is easier said than done. But an interesting new light has been cast on the situation by the floating of the idea by Datuk Paul Leong, Malaysia's Primary Industries Minister, that buffer stock rubber could be swapped for some of the American tin with which the stockpile is oversupplicd. Malaysia, which also dominates tin, would be pre-pared to hold this American tin.

The key to the recovery which has seen the rubber price rise 50 per cent since the beginning of the year is higher vehicle production. About 70 per cent of rubber goes into tyres. Thus demand from the United States has been substantially better in recent mooths.

The New York Yacht Club, the holders, are claiming that the keel makes Australia II faster than conventional 12 metre yachts and is unfair. They have asked the international governing body in yacht racing for an immediate ruling on the legality of Australia II's keel. Halsey Herresboff, the navigator of the Liberty and a leading US naval architect, joined in the controversy by supplying the New York Yacht Club with seven pages of technical matter in support of their claim. Herreshoff said in one their claim. Herreshoff said in one paragraph to James Michael, a member of the NYYC's America's Cup committee: "If the closely guarded, peculiar keel design of Australia It is allowed to remain in competition or is allowed to continue to be rated without penalty, the yacht will likely win the foreign trials and will likely win the America's Cup in September 1983." Mr Michael attached the memo to his letter to the International Yacht Racing Union and said it was being Kent tuvieta, the Maidstone based Rugby League side, open their second division season against Cardiff City on Smday, August 21 (3 p.m.).

The Rugby League's newest team, could hardly have wanted a tougher start to their first season, for Cardiff, who are expected to challenge strongly for the title, scored a coovincing victory over Fulham, the second division champions, at Stamford Bridge in their last Match of last season.

On the occasion, it was Cardiff's forward strength that told, and that suggests that Kent's newly as-sembled pack will face a stero examination in their first match. Fulham begin their second attempt to hold oo to a place in the first divisioo a week later on August 28 against Featherstone Rovers, winners of last season's State Express Challenge Cup, at Craven Cottage (3 p.m.). Rugby League supporters in the south east, could have divided loyalties next season, however, for

The imagural world champion-ships have already lost some of their credibility by excluding many of the top 10 in the world in their particular events. #### Samaranch not at all alarmed

Heisinki (AP)- Junn Antonio Samaranch yesterday dismissed suggestions that the world championships, starting here tomorrow, may lessen the importance of the Olympic Games. The Spanish President of the International Olympic Committee said at a Press conference: "We regard these championships as one of the most championships as one of the most important sports events in the world. They will not undermine the importance of the Olympic Games. On the contrary, I think the Olympics will become more important than ever, because track and field will be more important."

event of the year, with competitors such as Carl Lewis, Steve Cram, Jurgen Hingseo, Evelyn Ashford, and May Decker striving for sporting immortable. Yet, before the first event has begun, it is apparent that far more vigorous discipline is required in two important areas apart from qualifying performances: drug abuse and physical foul play in lane-free track events.

We cannot judge just what influence on the championships illegal drugs will have, though it is probable that it will be greater in the women's events than in the men's due to the recent development in the use of testosterone, the male hormone. What is certain is that until the IAAF introduce empulsory random testing - not least in the United States, where abuse it rife - on every country's athletes by an independem source, in any month of the year, the sport will continue to be corrupted and the athletes exploited.

With ferociously high standard probable in both the 800 and 1,500 probable in both the 800 and 1,500 metres, it will be interesting to see whether the outhorities are prepared to take the ultimate and only sanction of disqualification against those who gain tactical advantage by hlatant use of the arms. Ron Clarke, the former recordbreaker from Australia, who never won a major championship gold medal, is one of those appalled by contemporary tactics. He says: "It astonishes me these days in sport that we deprecate those who play within the rules and elevate the rough and tough characters like lan Botham, Harvey Smith, John McEnroe and Ian Chappell, Why don't we make people stick to the rules? Willie Carson can win the promise when he finished third before starting his eight-day that Quick Work and Milibow, the two who best him start are at Doncaster. the two who beat him that day,

On Oath is trained by Bruce Hobbs and his stable jockey. Geoff Baxter, won the South Coast Stakes at Lingfield with Amyndas. Now they have a good chance of doiog so again, this time with last year's St Leger runner-up Zilos, who was far from disgraced in the Jockey Club Stakes, his only race this season, Eveo Sabre Daoce, at Prince of Princes (7.50) and Little Mercy (8.20) are other likely winners at Lingfield. "You can tip her to win her next race too; she's in tremendous form at the moment. Those were John Winter's words after Little Mercy had won at 7-1 at Newmarket eight days ago. So ignore her in the

As for Prince of Princes, he ran really well behind Morgan's Choice at Ascot recently and Morgan's Choice promptly went on to take the Goodwood Stakes the following week.
What with the Kiwi Stakes;

the London-Wellington Handicap: the Tauranga Selling Handicap and the Air New Zealand Handicap, there will definitely be a scent form the southern hemisphere in the air at Newmarket this afternoon. The last-named is the most valuable race there an it may go to Thorndown, who beat Wiveton at Sandown last month. Having finished fourth in the resents the current elassie crop but he will be meeting Thorndown on nearly a stone worse terms than he would if this were a weight for age handicap and that could prove too much.

At his best, Riberetto looks the most leniently-treated runner in the field, bearing in mind that he did win the Derby Trial at Lingfield two years ago. But a lot of water has passed under the bridge in the meantime and in this instance not only Thorndown but also Balladier, Regal Steel and Jupiter Island have better form to their name. Jupiter Island has been the subject of a gamble to win the Ebor Handicap at York later this month. He will incur a 7lb penalty if he wins now.

Clerc: voted best player

Clerc's run ended by

Indianapolis (AFP and Reuter) – Argentina's Jose Luis Clerc dramati-cally withdrew from the United States clay court championships here only hours after being numed player of the month by tennis writers.

The 24-year-old player had been The 24-year-old player had been on course for his feurth successive tournament title after winning 15 matches in a new since his first round defeat at Wimbledon. But Clere astonished spectators by pulling out of his third mound match with Roberto Arguello, of the United States, when he lost the first set 6-1. He said later he had a heavy cold and was running a temperature. cold and was running a temperature.

Clere was second seed to the championships and his chances had looked good since the elimination of the top seed José Higueras, of Spaid by the American Icenaser, Jimmy Brown, in the first round.

The women's top seed, Andrea Temesvari, of Hungary, and the defending champion, Virginia Russic, of Romaoia, the fourth seed, won straight set victories to advance to a semi-final meeting. In the other semi-final, the second seed, Faithy Rinaldi, will face a fellow American, Zina Garrison, the third seed, for the first time.

The 17-year-old Miss Temesvari won 10 of the last 12 games to overpower eighth seeded American. Kathy Horvath. 6-3, 6-1. Miss Temesvari, winner of this year's talian Open, lost her service for the first time in the tournament in the fourth game of the first set, but in her final six service games she had three love games and lost only four points.

Foster's genuine pace and cool temperament can take him to the top

A year ago be shuffled into Chelmsford cricket ground, an anonymous spectator, noticed only because he was wearing a plaster cast. His back was broken and a promising career scemed to be over, at the age of 20. Today he strides into that same ground recognized by everyone as perhaps the brightest fast bowling prospect English cricket has produced for

The world of Neil Foster has been transformed because he gambled on a special operation to mend his back which involved the insertion of two six-inch stainless steel plates. They have kept the vertebrae rigid while the broken bones are healing. He has been able to bowl at full pace with no ill effects, and with astonishing results. He has taken 50 firstclass wickets, bowled magnificently in the Benson and Hedges Cup final at Lord's and is on the verge of the England team. All in three months.

"t sometimes think it's all a dream and I'm going to wake up." Foster said. "I was very tentative when I started the season, although I'd trained hard and was very fit. But i what's amazed me is that apart from a little stiffness after a hard day in the field I have had no reaction. Apart from a little swelling I get no pain.

The scars look sore and red and I omly show them to the doctor !"

The operation has been judged a total success and the steel plates will be removed at tite end of the season.

"It'll be a relief not to be called 'the man of steel' any more. I just hope I can take as many wickets without the

"I was surprised how quick he was when I first faced him". Denness said, "His pace is deceptive. But what always impressed me most was his action - it's flowing and fluent. He also has the great asset of bowling close to the stumps and he can move the ball into the batsman and away.

His bowling in the Benson and Hedges final proved the point. His three wickets for 26 in 11 overs and his magnificent run-out of Mike Gatting should have won Essex the tropby.

According to Denniss, hls protégé is level-headed and knows exactly where he is going.
"He has plenty of ambition,

After a break this week Foster, said: "I need the rest and time to reflect and catch up on all the mail and do some photography - mostly Essex cricket and country scenes. I'm a country boy at heart!"

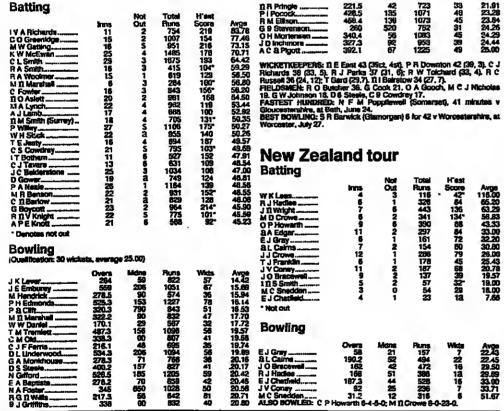

One of the letters he has to answer is from Australia. He has been asked to return to play club cricket in Tasmania (he won a Whitbread cricket scholarsbip there two years ago). He has also been promised a job as a croupier in a casino at Hobart. And a winter in the sun is a prospect that appeals to him. But what about spending the winter in Pakistan and New Zealand as a member of the

Letter from Budapest

Blowing the whistle on a football scandal

The heat which weighs on the limbs as heavily as gabardine has almost smo-thered the life of Budapest. But there is still enough righteous zeal for citizens to sit in cales and buses and argue the pros and cons of a hizarre football corruption scandal smacking of high farce, low deals and professional fouls.

This week 43 members and beneficiaries of a crime syndicate went on trial in Szekszard cate went on trial in Szekszard in southern Hungary. Next week dozens more will face a court in Budapest for membership of another syndicate accused of rigging the coontry's football pools.

This is one of the biggest corruption rackets to be exposed in Eastern Europe: well over 200 people are well over 200 people are involved including 196 football players, a number of allegedly bent referees, team managers and coaches as well as ex-players, car dealers and pillars of Hungarian mercantile respectability.

Hungary is football mad, but unfortunately not football talented. In the summer months there are no first division matches but the Toto the pools system - has to be kept alive to feed the national hunger for soccer and gam-bling. So the focus shifts to small local teams of indifferent quality.

Six million pools coupons a week are filled out by the Hongarians at five forints a fling - which means 30 million forints (about £500,000) rests on the outcome of matches that would not look out of place on a British village common.

Last summer two crime syndicates, one based in Budapest, decided to exploit the situation. Obtaining advance copies of match fixtures each syndicate - run by an illegal brains trust - would sit down and decide which matches to buy.

in an average week the syndicates would buy 10 matches out of 40 but sway the outcome of another three. That was sufficient to make a killing - after a couple of

Syndicate members would travel to the chosen regions and bribe people to throw the match. In some towns in was sufficient to bribe the goal-keeper, in others three or four players. Usually the referee had to be bribed as well. A typically Hungarian com-plication was that the two syndicates were not in collusion. So some teams found themselves bribed twice over. Fans can remember ludicrous scenes with players throwing themselves down in agony as soon as they had an opportunity to score, or referees declaring an offside violation if a goal was accidentally SCOFFEE The affair came to light when Toto officials - who were not in oo the deal spotted unusual combinations of winning entries.

Not surprisingly, the six million orthodox pools gam-blers felt cheated and the talk has still not died down:

Two enterprising Hungarian journalists - Andras Lakatos and Zsuzsa Lang wrote and published a book within two mooths of the scandal, this in a country with oo record of fast book production. The book sold 150,000 copies in a week.

The book, based on some of the main defendants facing trial, lists exactly what bribes were paid to what team. About half a million foriots in bribes was invested by the two

Although the public - or at least the male half since women seem to regard it as the inevitable outcome of an irrational passion - is incensed, fellow footballers take a more lenient view of their colleagues' conduct. Footbal-lers are paid too little, they say: of course corruption is inevitable. The nation's top footballers have stayed relatively immuoe from the scandal, but the Football Federation clearly suspects that not everything is as clean

The papers

The Daily Mail says the horrifying communal vinlence in Sri Lanka belongs to a sadly familiar pattern. Contrary in the impression given by films like Gandhi the end of the British empire meant the end of protection for millions of people belonging to minon'ty racial groups. Every day which passes shows more clearly that we have reason for pride, not shame, at the role we once played.

pride, not share, at the role we once played.

The Labour right's revulsion at the prospect of the "nightmare ticket" of Neil Kinnock as leader and Miichael Meacher as deputy has given some grim satisfaction to the Gong of Four the Daily Express says. They said years ago the left's advance was too far gone to resist and they were roundly jeered at by their former colleagues who are now seeing the light.
